Information Guides: Use our handy guides to find useful information about health-related topics. The guides point to online databases, websites and print resources that can help you research various health topics, search for doctors and insurance and find a list of local and state health services.

Databases: The internet has a lot of health information, but you can't always tell if it's based on research, written by experts and endorsed by physicians. Take the guesswork out of your healthcare and visit the Health and Medicine databases for authoritative articles, patient guides and research.

Public Computers: Use the Library's computers to learn more about your health care options or to access our Information Guides and Databases. All Austin Public Library locations have public computers with internet access and printers. These computers are open to everyone for personal or research purposes.

The resources provided by the Austin Public Library have been vetted by our reference staff for research and general informational purposes. For medical advice or instruction please consult your healthcare provider.
